Dear Ms. Sharr,

I would like to call your attention to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's proposed plan for the Superfund Site at Revere Chemical in Bucks County. It is my feeling that the EPA's plan is shortsighted. Presently the EPA reports that the site is stable but what is to prevent the further erosion of an unacceptable situation at this site once development and use of this property is underway. Could you be sure that once an activity such as blasting for a quarry is started that contaminates now "contain" wouldn't "shake loose" and find its way into the surrounding water supply. Has enough area been capped? Also, is it responsible to turn guardianship of this site over to the very people who created this problem in the first place, I would recommend that this site serve as a reminder of improper business practice which cost tax payers millions of dollars, endangered the health and welfare of their families and I would suggest that it be place in the stewardship of a State, County or local entity to insure that this doesn't happen again.

Thank You,

Guy Augeri
